Combined County Party Fundraising Remains Above Average

County political party committees continue to enjoy a healthy fundraising cycle with all 120 legislative seats at stake in the November 7 election, according to quarterly reports filed with the New Jersey Election Law Enforcement Commission (ELEC).

Combined fundraising for those committees during the first nine months of 2023 totaled just over $8 million.

Compared to eight state election years, the total is 29 percent higher.

Fund-raising by County Party Committees
Through September 30, 2023

PERIOD	RAISED	SPENT	CASH
2023 (State Election Year)	$8,060,981	$5,974,474	$5,277,593
Average for Eight State Election Years	$6,248,182	$5,175,977	$3,264,877
2023 Versus Average	29%	15%	62%

Spending is 15 percent above the state election average, while cash reserves are 62 percent more.

Fund-raising this year is lower than the 2021 total when inflation is taken into account.

--more--

A key consideration is that the 2021 total was inflated by an influx of national money into the state during the gubernatorial election.

The loss of that windfall largely is being offset by the fact that contribution limits for all party committees in New Jersey were raised when Governor Phil Murphy signed a new campaign finance law (P.L. 2023, Chapter 30) on April 3, 2023.

The law doubled the maximum annual contribution to county party committees from $37,500 to $75,000.

In addition, the law created new “housekeeping” accounts. A donor can give $75,000 to regular campaign accounts and $37,500 to the new accounts for a total of $112,000 each year.

Housekeeping accounts are earmarked solely for administrative expenses, including mortgages, rent, taxes, compliance costs, legal bills and collective bargaining outlays.

Only the two state parties and the 42 county parties can create such accounts. National parties also have housekeeping accounts under federal law.

Another boost to coffers is the fact that fundraising generally shoots up during state election years. This year’s total is not only higher than the average for state election years. It also is 75² percent above the average³ for seven federal election years since 2010.

Democratic county party committees this election year are fighting to hold on to majorities on both legislative houses that they have held since 2002.

They have raised and spent more funds and are sitting on larger cash reserves than Republican county party committees.
